

 r/Minecraft • 7mo ago
TapRecent9302

Why Are People so Unhappy with the Lackluster Minecraft updates?

 Discussion

Minecraft updates are free and the game doesn't cost that much , which is amazing considering the current price of games cough Nintendo cough So why are people so unhappy just enjoy the game that gets free updates and 4 drops per year.

 Archived post. New comments cannot be posted and votes cannot be cast.

0 9 Share

Sort by: Best   Search Comments

 qualityvote2 MOD • 7mo ago •  Stickied comment • Edited 7mo ago

- Upvote this comment if this is a good quality post that fits the purpose of r/Minecraft
- Downvote this comment if this post is poor quality or does not fit the purpose of r/Minecraft
- Downvote this comment and report the post if it breaks the rules

(Vote has already ended)

Vote ...

 Easy-Rock5522 • 7mo ago

Cause they're lackluster

8 ...

 Lupus_Aeterna • 7mo ago

I think our expectations for updates have been blown out of proportion by the Caves and Cliffs update, and the Nether Update. Because of those two massive updates that drastically changed the entire layout of the overworld and the nether, people want every update now to be held to those standards.

You can't really please everyone. Minecraft has a massive community, all with different types of players.

3 ...

Because people like to bitch and moan about things even before they actually try them. Some do it just to join a band wagon. Some would rather things stay the way they are. That's the upside to Java, you can pick a version and just stick to it, where as with Bedrock you're pretty much forced to play whatever update there is whether you like it or not.

Ignore them and make up your own mind. If you like the updates, then 🤪 the naysayers. If you don't like the updates then build a bridge and get over it.

3

Sonic2kj • 7mo ago

I mean the game is kinda mid. I think people forget that the whole mining part of minecraft is absolute garbage

3

Naddition_Reddit • 7mo ago

mostly because they are so small and unimportant that they dont even feel like updates.

The last 8 updates barely feel like 1 update because everything they added is so inconsequential and doesnt change anything about how the game is played.

When was the last time anyone used the sniffer?

2

MrBrineplays_535 • 7mo ago • Edited 7mo ago

Because they're entitled to receive major updates. Mojang also rose our expectations by a mile from that nether update, which makes many players disappointed when their expectations aren't met or the update gets delayed. Also, not everyone is a technical player. Oftentimes the majority just bases on how many blocks and entities with uses have been added in an update. They don't look at technical changes and major revamps in the game code that makes mods and datapacks even more customizable and efficient. Things like attributes and block/item entity displays are overlooked or ignored, while things like the locator bar are overfocused. Snapshot bugs are treated as if they're final, and bugs are also seen as mojang's "laziness", despite the bug's presence signifying a change in the internal code, and maybe a halfway fix over a spaghetti code.

The community sees an update "lackluster" for not having visual content. "Where mob?" "Where block?" "Where item?". The minecraft community is also huge, and every subcommunity has their own thing. What the community fails to remember is that it's not a giant single entity with a single opinion. The pvp community may see a new weapon as one of the best additions to the game, while a builder sees it as just one of the many useless things in the game. Satisfied players stay quiet, disappointed players shout to complain. The most obvious example of this is the building community. Mojang has added so many blocks in the game, and builders are happy. The other communities meanwhile are raging because "oh no!

updates. Mojang shows this cool new mob that digs up tons of cool plants. Community votes, gets a fat ass mob that digs up two plants. Community disappointed. Mojang shows glowing hypnotizing underwater mob, "ooh wow so unique!" Community votes, realizes it isn't dynamic lighting and doesn't hypnotize. Community disappointed. It's the lack of communication of mojang and the community that makes updates feel so awful. That's for mob votes though which in itself is already disappointing. For other features, the case is similar. For example, mojang added the pale garden. Imo it's a missed opportunity that they didn't add white pumpkins or a better looking tree. Lotta wasted potential. Armored paws also added wolf armor, but didn't add better dog ai. Really really really disappointing for a company owned by a monopoly.

There's also mojang doing parity fixes which pisses off the community because even with tons of complaining players, the "fixes" just don't get reverted. That issue adds to the feeling of an update feeling awful, and thus "lackluster" (meaning "no good or useful additions").

Lastly, everyone gets to check out the updates even before they are released. Currently the community's been exploring the new upcoming happy ghast update. By the time the update's released, everyone knows what it contains, hence the update is gonna feel "lackluster", meaning "no new features". The features just don't feel fresh anymore after you play with them for 100 hours straight.

Edit: as you can see in the comments, the community's pretty divided in their opinions. Some are mojang defenders, some are community defenders, and barely neutral ones. It really shows that this community's a hot toxic dump that likes living in a one-sided perspective. I hope y'all press f5 for once...

1

ton-x273 • 7mo ago

Because people are greedy! And then when Mojang actually does a big update (like the warden or the trial chambers), everyone was mad because these updates were "complicated" or "confusing" or "changing the game too much". People begged for wolf armor for years, Mojang provided an update with wolf armor from armadillos, and people were angry about that too. Nothing is ever good enough.

-1

ImmaDrainOnSociety • 3mo ago

Someone that hasn't played in 10+ years could pick it up now and wouldn't be even slightly lost.

1