Hi. Matzu, by the way.

I am in a writing class that has asked me to write a profile on someone. In particular, someone who means something to me, and someone who represents a type of person, and as I had decided on profiling a pastor, I consider you to be excellent for this.

If it isn't too bothersome I have some initial questions:

- What got you into the pastorship?
- What does a day-to-day-by-day look like, particularly, in the buildup to a worship service?
- What goes into writing a sermon?

Detail is preferable. Understand that I will likely have some follow-up questions, and I will attach them as a reply to this email.

Matzu,
I hope it will be helpful.
Have a blessed week.

1. What got you into the pastorship?

I dedicated my life to the pastorship by God's calling and my personal experiences. I believe God has called me to lead worship with joy and encourage the Church to become a compassionate community of the marginalized. One of my personal experiences that shaped my vocation is in music and worship ministries during my college years. I traveled a lot of cities and countries for missional concert tours. These experiences led me to a life of service for a joyful worship ministry. I realized that God calls me to build and grow a church that seeks people who want to worship God, praise the Lord, and pray for others in Christ. I want to create an opportunity to address matters of eternal significance and guide people in their relationship with God on their spiritual journeys.

2. What does a day-to-day look like, particularly in the buildup to a worship service?

My weekdays are a harmonious blend of preparation, administration, and spiritual focus. As the days leading up to Sunday approach, I strike a balance between practical tasks and ongoing reflection and connection to the congregation and the message being shared. Worship planning commences with the selection of themes, scriptures, and the meticulous crafting of the order of worship for the upcoming services. I ensure that staff and volunteers are fully aware of their roles and are prepared for Sunday services by checking in with them. My administrative assistant and music director provide invaluable support in preparing for worship. Additionally, our laity leadership team offers invaluable support and assistance through numerous meetings and practical preparations, empowering me and my ministries.

3. What goes into writing a sermon?

I adhere to the lectionary, a structured set of readings for Sundays and weekdays from the Old Testament, Psalms,

New Testament Epistles, and Gospels. My focus is on the scripture, clarity, and engaging our context to achieve spiritual relevance and depth. I also frequently refer to commentaries, which serve as study companions for the Bible, providing explanations, interpretations, and insights into the text. Additionally, commentaries offer practical applications on how to incorporate the scriptures into our daily lives. I strive to make the message relatable and memorable by incorporating stories, illustrations, and personal or cultural applications. Before delivering my sermon, I meticulously review it, practice my delivery, and pray for the congregation and for God's guidance during the service.

Thank you!
Peace in Christ!

Excellent.

I do have a few additional questions:

- Would you say there are any particular events that inspired your ministry?
- Have you encountered any particular turbulence in your ministry? Tell me about it if you can.
- Do you use Artificial Intelligence in any portion of your ministry? (Semons, Emails, etc.)

1. Would you say there are any particular events that inspired your ministry?

Worship is the most profound and inspiring moment of experiencing God's presence, both personally and communally. I believe God communicates with us through Scripture, spiritual experiences, tradition, and reason. Additionally, the Church of Peace offers numerous opportunities to encounter the Spirit, such as participating in ministry committees, joining Bible study groups, prayer chains, and fellowship/spiritual events like Yoga Church, coffee hours, luncheons, and visiting the sick or members in care centers. These events truly inspire me.

2. Have you encountered any particular turbulence in your ministry?

The ministry frequently faces substantial challenges, such as relational conflicts, theological disagreements, leadership disputes, and miscommunication. These obstacles can hinder outreach efforts and undermine unity within the organization. I focus, therefore, on the relationship with God and with others in the faith community. If we continue to build a trust relationship in Christ, we are able to overcome all challenges. Miscommunication or a lack of transparent dialogue often exacerbates existing challenges, where misunderstandings can spread quickly. Sometimes, I encounter challenges in adapting to change, preserving traditions, or operating effectively with limited staff and budget. With open communication, I hope that we continue to cultivate servant leadership. Moreover, a willingness to adapt tends to foster growth and long-term well-being.

3. Do you use Artificial Intelligence in any portion of your ministry?

I use artificial intelligence to proofread my sermons and improve the fluency of my English sentences.
